

One more fabulous week in our land

The week that was... 'Fabulous or Fools'...

■ IS THERE A DOCTOR WHO WILL GROUSE?

Remember how I recently told you of the vicious ad hominem attacks by harm seductionists against the federal government and columnists across this country, as thanks for our efforts to administer truth serum into the donnybrook over Vancouver's One Pillar approach?

Well, the band plays on ...

This week Dr. Julio Montaner of the self-named B.C. Centre for "Excellence" lashed out at the federal Conservative government for telling the truth ...

"When you neglect purposely a percentage of the population that can be defined on the basis of a particular characteristic, that's genocide ... these people [the Canadian government], they have no morals and they are after this population because they want them gone," said Montaner.

Let's get this straight: Dr. Yes, so immersed in his own propagandist lather, thinks the Prime Minister and his steady, responsible government are willfully committing genocide and wish drug addicts would die.

Diagnosis: Nuttiness can occur at any time ... refrain from operating heavy machinery, taking the bus, speaking to the media, please, until, at least, your rash has disappeared ... or you've finished chewing your gum.

Verdict: Come down off your remarkably high horse, Doctor, since the lack of oxygen may be constricting blood flow to your brain.

■ PIERRE ELLIOTT OBAMA

How will the presumptive next President of the Excited States of Amnesia pay for his outrageous promises?

Here's a newer one: He will create FIVE MILLION new jobs by strategically investing $150 billion to "catalyze private efforts to build clean energy."

Warning: Gentleman, Jack

REBEL WITH A CLAUSE

should be consumed sparingly and not a bottle at a time, Barry. Trust me.

Verdict: Obama's a fool, but you like him, right, right ...?

■ HARPER VALLEY YOA?

According to Prime Minister Harper, young offenders' names will be released and sentences toughened considerably.

Not good enough for bleeding heart Dr. Neil Boyd of SFU: "Tough sentences don't work in Canada," opines he.

Really? Can you name a tough law in this country, since bloody Trudeau abolished the death penalty and diluted the Criminal Code? Enough speeding tickets will dispense almost the equivalent punishment as assisting in beating a victim just short of his life: Two years (with good behaviour). No tough laws for cowards, eh Neil? Tell that to former Canadian Forces recruit Michael Levy and his wheelchair.

Verdict: Doc looks like a fool. Harper: fabulous.

■ COLOUR ME BABES, WITH YOUR CRAYONS!

Former Saanich NDP candidate Julian West and I went to school together. He was an exceptional mathematician, scholar and runner and could solve a Rubik's cube in 20 seconds.

When I heard that he had to resign, because years ago he had stripped present of young teen girls and suggested they body paint his, er, excitement, I thought, "Oh dear ..." But for fourteen years no one was offended?!

And then I remembered ...

We were in debating together. One coach once remarked, "You know Tsakumis, West is smooth like silk, and you're nothing but a street fighter."

Yup, that Julian was a master debater alright ...

Have a great weekend.
